Global Health Law at Georgetown Law

Georgetown University Law Center offers an unparalleled opportunity for lawyers to broaden and deepen their understanding of law. Our extraordinary faculty combines leading scholars with experienced lawyers, judges and government officials, allowing us to offer more than 300 courses and seminars. Our talented LL.M. students bring exemplary academic credentials and practice experience from throughout the United States and around the world.

Georgetown Law: The Premier Center for the Study of National and Global Health Law

Georgetown Law brings together an extraordinary faculty and diverse curriculum in the field of national and global health law. The O'Neill Institute for National and Global Health Law, housed at Georgetown, features centers on global health, disease prevention and health outcomes, health regulation and governance, and health care financing and organization. Georgetown is also home to the Centers for Law and the Public's Health, which is the only center of its kind to be designated as a World Health Organization (WHO) and U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) Collaborating Center.

Georgetown's curricular strengths include not only health law and policy, but also the related fields of public health law, health care finance, food and drug regulation, international human rights, environmental law, bioethics, intellectual property, access to health care, and trade. Georgetown also offers an LL.M. degree in Global Health Law and International Institutions, jointly offered in partnership with the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies in Geneva, Switzerland. Together with an LL.M., students can earn certificates in International Human Rights, WTO (World Trade Organization) Law, and National Security Law.

For a small number of highly qualified students who desire to enter law teaching outside the U.S., Georgetown also offers the S.J.D. degree.

Georgetown University Law Center offers graduate students a unique opportunity to study health law — including both global and domestic health law issues. The Global Health Law program offers lawyers working nationally and internationally the opportunity to advance their knowledge and skills through focused studies in core legal and policy courses on global health, individual and public health, human rights, bioethics, international economics, biotechnology and science.

The Global Health Law LL.M.: A Unique Program of Study

Issues of health are increasingly transnational in scope and involve complex legal issues. Georgetown's LL.M. in Global Health Law is the only program to bring together lawyers and academics from around the world for a unique study opportunity focused on this growing field of law. Students come from multiple countries with differing cultural backgrounds, and from existing positions in government, international and private organizations, health care or pharmaceutical industries, private law practice, health care services, public health systems, and universities. Georgetown's renowned faculty includes some of the world's leading experts and scholars on health and related fields.

In addition to their coursework, students can pursue independent research projects with individual faculty members. Many students also secure externship placements at national and international organizations, such as the Pan American Health Organization, the National Institutes of Health and the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

Students in the Global Health Law LL.M. program spend the full year (or up to 3 years on a part-time basis) at Georgetown and have the option of combining their Global Health Law degree with a certificate in a related field.

The Global Health Law and International Institutions LL.M.: Jointly Offered by Georgetown Law and the Graduate Institute in Geneva

The Global Health Law and International Institutions LL.M. program brings together two institutions at the cutting edge of global health law and diplomacy: Georgetown University Law Center in Washington, D.C. and the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies in Geneva, Switzerland.

Protecting the public's health and improving individual health outcomes requires international innovation and collaboration through legal systems. International institutions play an important role in global health governance and in the development of global health law and policy. A comprehensive approach to global health law involves multiple, interrelated fields including health, trade, economics, intellectual property, human rights, ethics, and national security.

Georgetown University Law Center and the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies in Geneva, Switzerland have partnered to offer an LL.M. in Global Health Law and International Institutions. The program brings together two institutions at the cutting edge of global health law diplomacy to offer graduate students an unmatched opportunity to further their careers in a rapidly growing field of law.

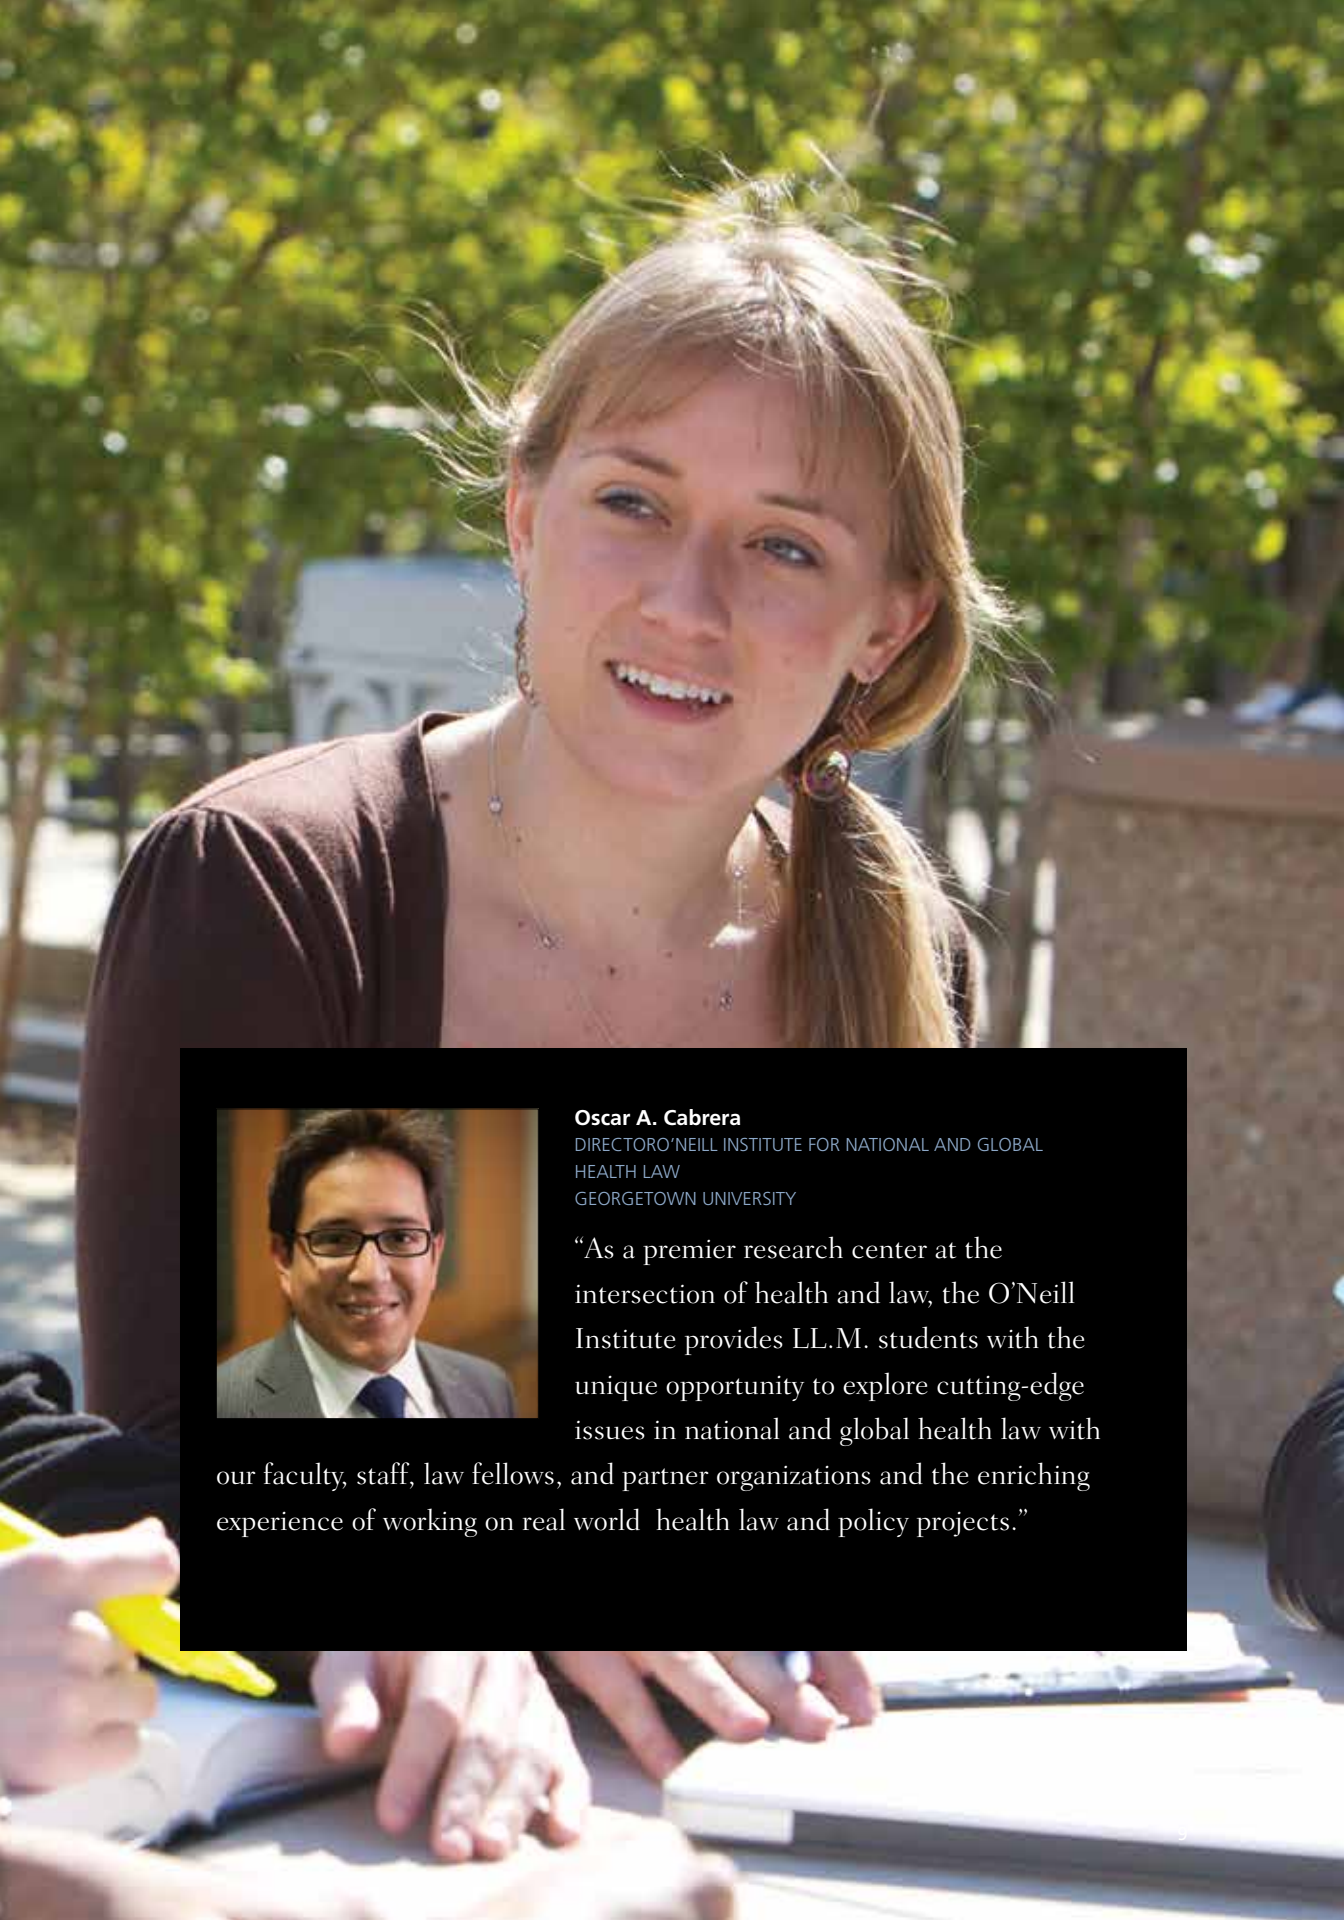

Students benefit from unparalleled course offerings from some of the world's leading experts and scholars in global health law, public health law, health and human rights, bioethics, intellectual property law, international trade law, international environmental law, and international affairs and development studies. In addition, students participate in a unique internship program. Between completing their coursework at Georgetown (either in one full-time fall semester or three part-time semesters) and beginning their full-time spring semester at the Graduate Institute, Geneva, students intern at institutions working at the forefront of global health governance, such as the World Health Organization, UNAIDS, the World Trade Organization, and the International Labor Organization.

The O'Neill Institute for National and Global Health Law: Discovering innovative solutions to the world's most pressing health concerns

Georgetown's health law program benefits in many ways from its collaboration with the O'Neill Institute, which is housed within the Georgetown University Law Center. By contributing to a more powerful and deeper understanding of the multiple ways in which law can be used to improve health, the O'Neill Institute hopes to advance scholarship, research, and teaching that will encourage key decision-makers in the public, private, and civil society sectors to employ the law as a positive tool for enabling more people in the United States and throughout the world to lead healthier lives.

The O'Neill Institute's research program is organized around three areas of focus: Global Health Law, National Health Law, and the Center for Disease Prevention and Outcomes. The O'Neill Institute responds to urgent health Problems by engaging in projects with external partners (such as international organizations and NGOs), and by developing world-class research and scholarship using a comprehensive, interdisciplinary, and transnational lens which extends beyond a narrow vision of health law that focuses solely on health care as an industry or scientific endeavor.

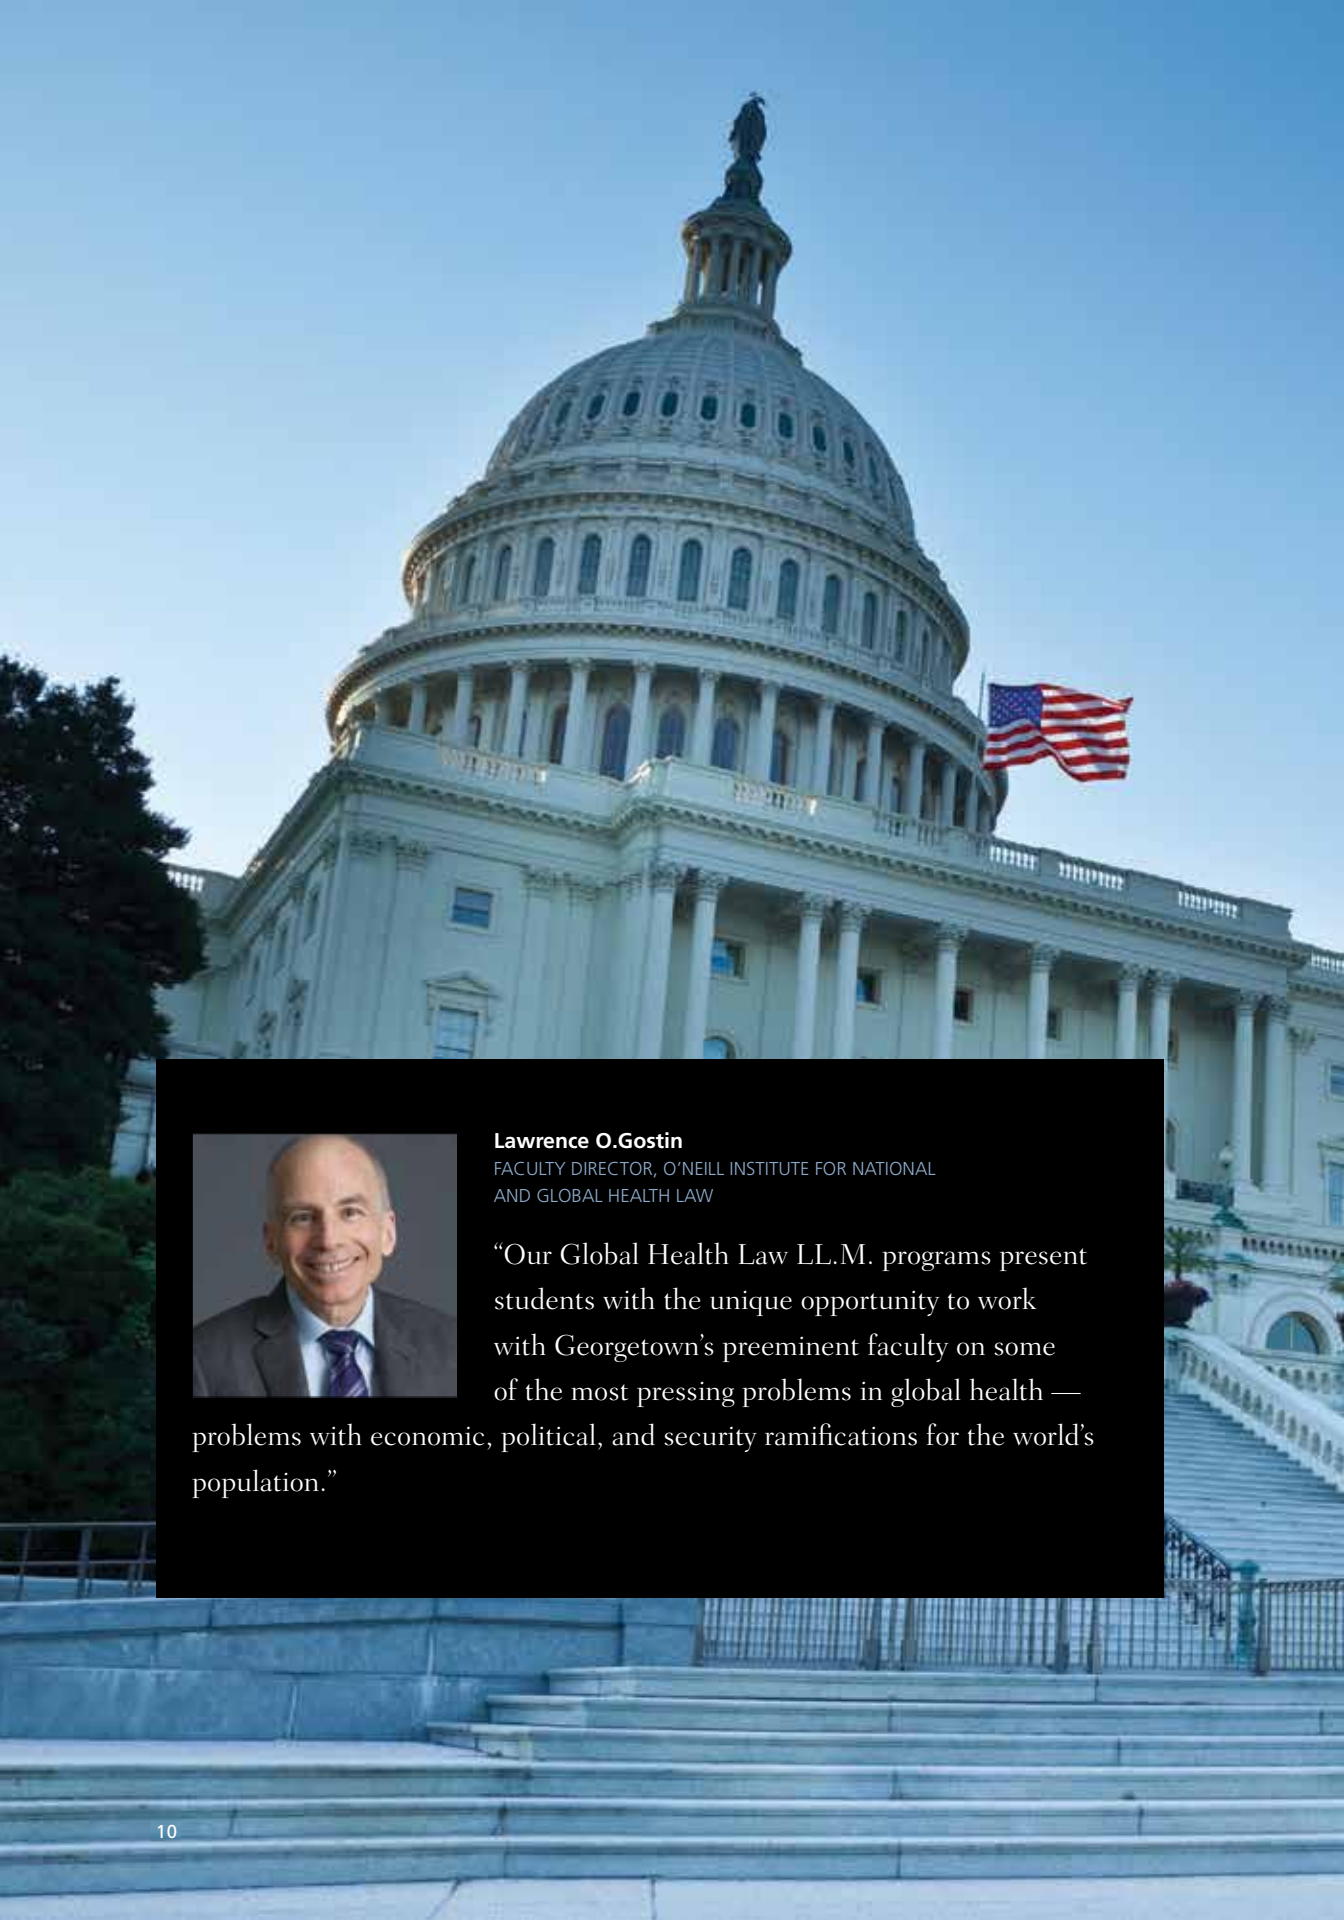

Global Health LL.M. students are integrated into the O'Neill Institute in many ways and have the opportunity to work on the Institute's projects as research assistants, enroll in its experiential learning classes and attend the many symposia and events hosted by the Institute. The O'Neill Institute also offers a new Summer Program in Global Health Law and Governance. Over a five-day period, the Summer Program brings together practioners, policy-makers, advocates and leading academics in global health to learn about the foundations of global health law and governance. Oscar A. Cabrera

DIRECTOR O'NEILL INSTITUTE FOR NATIONAL AND GLOBAL HEALTH LAW
GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY

“As a premier research center at the intersection of health and law, the O’Neill Institute provides LL.M. students with the unique opportunity to explore cutting-edge issues in national and global health law with our faculty, staff, law fellows, and partner organizations and the enriching experience of working on real world health law and policy projects.”

Lawrence O. Gostin

FACULTY DIRECTOR, O'NEILL INSTITUTE FOR NATIONAL AND GLOBAL HEALTH LAW

“Our Global Health Law LL.M. programs present students with the unique opportunity to work with Georgetown’s preeminent faculty on some of the most pressing problems in global health — problems with economic, political, and security ramifications for the world’s population.”

The Georgetown Law Experience: Washington, D.C.

Georgetown Law's campus is located in the heart of Washington, D.C., a premier location to study law in a global context. Washington is a beautiful, international city that is the seat of U.S. government and is also home to major international organizations. Georgetown Law regularly hosts lectures, symposia, and informal meetings with national and international policymakers and lawyers from around the world. The law campus includes two libraries, state-of-the-art classrooms, a student residence hall, a sport and fitness center, and dining facilities. There are ample open spaces for students to gather for study or social occasions.

Georgetown's LL.M. program is one of the most diverse graduate legal programs in the world, each year attracting lawyers from six continents and more than 60 nations with a wide range of interests, backgrounds, and experiences.

JUSTICE, UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

“Georgetown is educating future generations of students who will become — upon their graduation — leaders in many private, public and nonprofit fields of endeavor. The Global Health Law LL.M. program is helping prepare graduates to engage in multidisciplinary conversations about national and global health law and policy and to rigorously analyze the theoretical, philosophical, political, cultural, economic, scientific and ethical bases for understanding and addressing health problems.”

Alexandra Jones

GLOBAL HEALTH LAW LL.M. GRADUATE, 2011

“As the health of the world’s population increasingly becomes a defining issue of our time, the richness of academic experience offered by Georgetown and the O’Neill Institute presented an exciting opportunity for me to engage with leading scholars and propel myself to the forefront of this emerging area of public international law and policy debate. Friendships forged with diverse and talented classmates enriched both the challenge and enjoyment of academic pursuit across a wide range of subjects at the interface of health, ethics, international law, international relations, development, foreign policy and trade. An externship with Human Rights Watch during my second semester allowed me to engage with this new legal awareness in a practical policy environment. As an Institute Associate now working on issues of HIV/AIDS prevention, women’s reproductive rights and the global challenge of non-communicable diseases, I now reflect on my LLM experience as providing not only a comprehensive academic foundation, but also fueling my personal motivation to continue forging a career in global health law and policy at one of the epicentres of global health governance here in Washington, D.C.”

The Graduate Institute Experience: Geneva, Switzerland

The Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies is a leading institution of research and higher education dedicated to the study of world affairs. The Institute gathers a cosmopolitan community located in the heart of Geneva.

Students in the Global Health Law and International Institutions LL.M. program will complete half of their degree requirements at the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies. The semester in Geneva provides participants with a unique opportunity to explore the world of international institutions and the relationship that it shares with global health governance. The Graduate Institute's campus is located in Geneva, Switzerland. No other European city has such a strong international organization presence. With scores of official agencies and organizations and dozens of international non-governmental organizations based in and around Geneva, it is truly an international city, bringing together policymakers, diplomats, advocates, and many other professionals whose work focuses on the most challenging issues of global health law, policy, and governance.

The Institute's student body is composed of more than 800 Master's and Ph.D. students from all over the world. In addition to its disciplinary and interdisciplinary degree programs, the Institute hosts numerous events, lectures, conferences, and symposia that attract leading authorities on international relations and development studies from across the globe. The Institute operates in two official languages, English and French, which allows students to express themselves and prepare written work in their preferred language. The Global Health Law and International Institutions LL.M. program is held in English.

Graduate Institute Faculty

At the Graduate Institute, the Global Health Law and International Institutions LL.M. program is directed by Professor Cédric Dupont, a renowned political science scholar in the field of global governance and international negotiation. Professor Andrea Bianchi, Head of the International Law Department, acts also a significant support and mentor to LL.M participants.

International Organisations
Trade and Investment Law Clinic

Not all courses are offered every year.

At the Institute, LL.M participants are integrated within the cohort of regular students in the Master programmes in International Law and can also attend a selection of seminars reserved to advanced PhD students. Support from the International Office and the Career Office is designed specifically for LL.M participants.

ANDREA BIANCHI

PROFESSOR OF INTERNATIONAL LAW, GRADUATE INSTITUTE, GENEVA

“Global health law and policy is a constantly evolving field, in which a multiplicity of actors interact in myriad different ways. Multilateral negotiations and transnational decision-making processes call into question long-established modes of international governance and transcend the traditional dichotomies of public vs. private, international vs. national regulation. In Geneva, at the very heart of multilateral law and policy making, the Graduate Institute’s programme on global health law provides its participants with the theoretical and practical skills that are necessary to understand the functioning and the dynamic of all these new processes. If you want to become a global health professional, this is the place where you want to be trained.”

Our Students: Studying Health Law and Policy in a Global Context

Health law and policy are increasingly global and interdisciplinary and our students' backgrounds and interests reflect that. They come from careers in the public and private sector where they have worked in health law and policy and related fields at the international level or at the national level in a global context. In addition to first law degrees, many of them also hold degrees in public health, public policy, the basic sciences, or medicine.

Georgetown Law's Global Health Law programs are open to highly qualified candidates with a J.D., LL.B., or other first law degree and strong interest or background in global health law and policy. Students in the Global Health Law LL.M. Program spend one full academic year (or up to three years on a part-time basis) at Georgetown. Students in the Global Health Law and International Institutions LL.M. Program spend the fall semester (or up to three part-time semesters) at Georgetown Law and the spring semester at the Graduate Institute, Geneva.

Post-graduate law students at Georgetown Law and at the Graduate Institute, Geneva, are extraordinarily diverse, talented, and committed. They come from the U.S., Europe, Canada, Latin and South America, Africa, Asia, and Australia and from distinguished careers in government service, law teaching, research, and advocacy. They bring a wealth of experience in health law and related fields to the classroom and their research interests cover a broad range of health law and policy topics, including intellectual property law and access to medicines, the health policy implications of international trade law, health and human rights, HIV/AIDS law and policy, environmental health and the law, product safety, tobacco control, bioethics, and global health governance. For more information, please see www.law.georgetown.edu/graduate/globalhealth.htm.

Global Health Law Scholarships: Building a Network of Global Health Lawyers

Each year Georgetown invites particularly meritorious candidates to be Global Health Law Scholars. In addition to their title, Scholars may receive full or partial tuition awards.

Scholars are selected on the basis of:

1. Academic qualifications in the fields of law/ethics and public health, health policy, health economics, bioethics or other relevant disciplines;
2. Public or private sector work experience on global or domestic health law issues; and
3. Demonstrated potential for excellence within the field of global health law.

Students' financial needs may also be considered.
